Self Awareness FOCUS AREA

Understanding your patterns and protecting your energy

You are building a clearer picture of what gives you energy, what drains it, and what patterns are at play. That awareness is the foundation for every other change - you can only work with what you can see.

A

Aim

Moving toward what matters and staying on track

29

This score reflects how consistently your attention and energy are moving toward what matters most. Direction improves when priorities are visible and the next step is clear and doable.

Foundation
Routines and structures that keep life steady

Foundation reflects the routines, structures and supports that help life feel stable. When this is strong, you recover faster when things wobble and you have more reserve for what matters.

E

Emotion
Recognising, pausing, and responding rather than reacting

Emotion reflects your capacity to notice rising emotional signals, pause before reacting, and return to balance after difficult moments. Recovery speed is the skill that grows over time.

SESSION SNAPSHOT

* Your foundation is genuinely solid—your daily routines, resetting practices, and ability to simplify under pressure are all working well, and that's what's holding you steady right now. * What's costing you energy is the gap between noticing what drains you and actually doing something about it—you can see your energy sources and drains, and you know when your tank is low, but adjusting your patterns and protecting your energy in real time isn't landing yet, and that same lag shows up when emotions start rising. * In the session we need to get specific about what's stopping you from shifting your patterns once you notice them, because that's where your real friction is.
